DATE OF THE COMPOSITION OF THE NOTITIAE EPISCOPATUUM ECCLESIAE CONSTANTINOPOLITANAE NOS. 4, 5 AND 6*

The Notitiae episcopatuum Ecclesiae Constantinopolitanae nos. 4, 5 and 6 are important sources for the reconstruction of the territorial organization of the Patriarchate of Constantinople in the 9th century. There are different opinions in the existing scholarly works about precise dating of those notitiae, ranging from the beginning of the 9th century, through the middle of it, up to its end. In this work, we analyse the content of each of the mentioned notitiae and point to certain elements which allow us to date more precisely each of them to the period between 806 and 838.

Keywords: notitiae episcopatuum, Patriarchate of Constantinople, Amorium, Crete, Trebizond, Isaurian Seleucia

The date of the composition of the notitia 4

The so-called Notitia of Basil of Ialimbana, now commonly known as notitia 4, according to the critical edition of J. Darrouzès,1 has been long known in Byzantine studies. However, different scholars tended to date it differently. Current view is the one established by Darrouzès, according to which this notitia is, based on its content, close to the conditions at the Council of Constantinople of 869.2

This notitia is in its content very close to the notitia 2, which was composed between 805/806 and 814.3 In comparison to the notitia 2, notitia 4 has two

---

* The paper contains the results of the work on the Project no. 177032 – Tradition, innovation and identity in the Byzantine world – supported by the Ministry of education, science and technological development of the Republic of Serbia.

2 Notitiae, 44–45.
major differences. First, in the notitia 4 the metropolitans of the Western provinces are grouped together in a separate entity,⁴ while according to the notitia 2 an effort was made to find a suitable place for them within the existing hierarchy of the Patriarchate of Constantinople.⁵ Second, in the notitia 4 the metropolitan of Amorium (tou/ Βαρμίου) was mentioned for the first time in the list of metropolitans and bishops by their respective metropolitan sees, with suffragan bishops of Philomelium, Docimium, Claneum, Polybotum and Pissia,⁶ while in the notitia 2 the ecclesiastical head of that city had still been just autocephalous archbishop and ordinary bishop.⁷

Amorium. The status of the hierarch of Amorium, the city that was the seat of the Theme of Anatolica since the 7th century, was the characteristic of the notitia 4 which was noticed long ago and which has most often been used as a base for dating the composition of the notitia. So, when did the hierarch of Amorium receive the rank of metropolitan? There were two major events in the history of the city in the 9th century. The first one was the accession of Michael II, the native of the city, to the Imperial throne in 820.⁸ The second was the Arab sack and destruction of the city, on August the 12th, 838.⁹ H. Gelzer had an opinion that between those two events, under the rule of the emperors that stemmed from the city, it was at the height of its progress and importance, which brought to it even the status of a metropolitan see.¹⁰ However, that opinion was later abandoned by subsequent scholars.¹¹

Gelzer’s view was abandoned by later scholars primarily because of the fact that after 838 Amorium appeared in the sources again as an ordinary bishopric.¹² It seems, however, that they underestimated the importance of the destruction and the depopulation of the city in 838 for the subsequent fate of the city and its church and that they neglected the possibility of discontinuity in the development of the city church organization as a consequence of the catastrophe of 838. Another reason for rejecting the Gelzer’s thesis was the fact that the sources which describe the Arab sack

---

⁴ Notitiae, 4.483–492.
⁵ Notitiae, 2.10–13, 38–41, 207–243. On the place and the manner in which the Western provinces were represented in the notitia 2, cf. Komatina, Osnivanje, 29–32.
⁷ Notitiae, 2.77, 301.
¹⁰ Georgii Descriptio, Intro, XV.
¹¹ E. Honigmann, Die Notitiae des Basileios von Lalama, Byz 9 (1934) 205–222, tried to prove the apsolute reliability of the note in one of the Mss. of the notitia, according to which the notitia was composed in 886, during the rule of lord emperor Leo the Wise and of patriarch Photius. At the same time, V. Laurent, La «Notitia» de Basile l’Arménien. Tradition manuscrite et date de composition, EO 34 (1935) 439–472, basing it on some other arguments, came to the conclusion that the notitia was composed between 845/846 and 863–869. V. Grumel, La«Notitia» de Basile de Lalama. Essai sur la date de composition, REB 19 (1961) 198–207, narrowed that interval to the 848–858. J. Darrouzès, Notitiae, 44–45, questions such a precise dating, claiming only that the notitia resembles the conditions close to those of the Council of 869/870.
¹² Cf. further bellow.
of the city mention no metropolitan of Amorium. Those sources, however, mention also no bishop, nor speak of any kind of the church organization of the city, for they were concentrated primarily on the matters of war.

The rank of the hierarch of Amorium before 838 is evident from the _notitiae episcopatuum_. Originally, the bishop of Amorium was just a suffragan of the metropolitan of Pissinous in the eparchy of Galatia II, according to the _notitia I_. However, already in the _notitia 2_, composed in the time of the patriarch Nicephorus (806–815), we can find him as an autocephalous archbishop, in the eparchy of Galatia II, but he is also recorded at his old place among the suffragans of the metropolitan of Pissinous. The next information on the hierarch of Amorium is from the end of the year 814, and it testifies that he had already got the rank of metropolitan. Namely, according to the short _Life of St. Theophylactus of Nicomedia the Confessor_, found in the _Synaxarium Ecclesiae Constantinopolitanae_, the patriarch Nicephorus, after the emperor Leo V the Armenian, an iconoclast, had taken the throne, immediately summoned to him the chosen among the hierarchs – Emilianus of Cyzicus, Ephthymius of Sard, Joseph of Thessalonica, Eudoxius of Amorium, Michael of Synnada, Theophylactus of Nicomedia, to approach the emperor and try to change his religious views. This information has been usually dated to december 814. As all the other mentioned hierarchs, with no exception, were metropolitans, it is quite clear that the hierarch of Amorium, Eudoxius by name, was also a metropolitan at that time. If his rank was then in any way lower then theirs, there would be no chance for him to be listed in the fourth place among them, just after the metropolitan of Thessalonica and before the metropolitans of Synnada and Nicomedia, the two ancient and influential church centers with long tradition as metropolitan sees. That is clear evidence that Amorium was the seat of a metropolitan already at the end of 814. So, as it is evident, the rise in significance of the hierarch of Amorium at the end of the 8th and the beginning of the 9th century followed a natural path – according to the _notitia 1_ he was just ordinary bishop, suffragan of the metropolitan of Pissinous, according to the 13 On the sources on the fall of Amorium in 838, cf. n. 28.

---

14 About Amorium on the eve of the fall in 838, cf. _Vasiliev, Arabes I–I_, 160–161, n. 1, who accepted the opinion of _Honigmann_, Notitia, 210, that Amorium became metropolitan see only between 879 and 886, in honor of the Forty-two martyrs of Amorium.
15 Even hagiographical sources, such as different Skazania o 42 amorijskih mučenikah“ i cerkovnaja služba im“; izd. V. Vasil’evskij – P. Nikitin”, Zapiski Imperatorskoj Akademii Nauk“ VIII, 7/2, St-Peterburg“ 1905, 1–90, give substantial data relevant for the military and administrative organization of Byzantine Asia Minor, for they mention the strategoi of the _Seven themes_, cf. ibidem, 1.15, 65.8, while their description of the very city of Amorium ends with constatations that it was a glorius, great and densely populated city, ibidem, 11, 42, 65, 71, which is located in the East of the empire, ibidem, 1, 11.
16 Notitiae, 1,239.
17 Notitiae, 2,77.
18 Notitiae, 2,301.
20 The regestes des actes du Patriarcat de Constantinople I. Les actes des patriarches 2: Les regestes de 715 a 1043, ed. _V. Grumel_, Paris 1936, n. 391, date the patriarch’s epistle to the hierarchs on this subject to december 814, some time before Christmas.
21 The information has not been unknown to the authors, but it has not been taken as seriously as it deserves. _Honigmann_, Notitia, 209, mentioned it only by the way and in the same manner tried to explain it in the way that the mentioned Eudoxius might have been also an autocephalous archbishop.
he became autocephalous archbishop, which was one step below the rank of metropolitan, and then, before the end of 814, he got the highest, metropolitan rank. Thus, the rise of the head of the church of Amorium from the rank of autocephalous archbishop to the rank of metropolitan occurred sometime between the composition of the notitia and the end of 814, and it indeed had nothing to do with the accession of the Amorian dynasty to the imperial throne of Constantinople in 820.

Most probably it was the individual qualities of the hierarchs of Amorium that contributed to the promotion of their ecclesiastical rank. They had a significant role even at the Seventh ecumenical council in Nicaea in 787. Perhaps that was the reason why they got autocephaly from their metropolitans and instead of ordinary suffragan bishops became autocephalous archbishops, the direct suffragans of the patriarch. However, it seems that the further promotion of the see of Amorium is to be credited to the mentioned Eudoxius. He was one of the chosen of the hierarchs, entrusted by the patriarch Nicephorus to try to cure the emperor Leo of his iconoclastic beliefs. Being one among the top five out of more then thirty highest dignitaries of the Patriarchate is no little thing. Eudoxius must have earned such an estimation somehow, and when he earned it, he got as a reward the metropolitan rank with five suffragan bishops. So, he would have been first metropolitan of Amorium, ordained by the patriarch Nicephorus, sometime before the end of 814. In any case, the exposed arguments turn the thesis that Amorium was a metropolitan see before 838 into a fact.

However, the fact is also that in the sources after 838 Amorium reappears as an ordinary bishopric, which we will expose further on. Because of that we have to examine the above-mentioned hypothesis about the possibility of discontinuity in the development of the church organization of Amorium after the destruction of the city in 838.

Concerning that, there is one interesting fact. According to the notitia 1, the bishop of Amorium is suffragan of the metropolitan of Pissinous, in the eparchy of Galatia II. According to the notitia 2, the autocephalous archbishop of Amorium was also in the eparchy of Galatia II. According to the very notitia 4, metropolitan of Amorium was a metropolitan of the same eparchy of Galatia II. But, according to the later notitiae, composed in the 10th century, the metropolitan of Amorium was a metropolitan of the eparchy of Phrygia! Thus, concerning the hierarch of Amorium,

---

21 Within the hierarchy of the Patriarchate of Constantinople, the title of autocaphalous archbishops belonged to those hierarchs that were not subordinated to any metropolitan, but directly to the patriarch of Constantinople. They had no bishops under their jurisdiction and their rank within the hierarchy of the Patriarchate was bellow the rank of the metropolitans, but above the rank of ordinary bishops suffragans of metropolitans, E. Chryssos, Zur Entstehung der Institution der autokephalen Erzbistümer, BZ 62 (1969) 263; Oxford Dictionary of Byzantium, ed. A. Kazhdan, Oxford 1991, I, 155–156 (A. Papadakis).

23 Synaxarium, 519.17–520.1.

24 Notitiae, 1.239.

25 Notitiae, 2.77.

26 Notitiae, 4.39; 477; Georgii Descriptio, 40a, 513–514.

27 Notitiae, 7.654; 9.528; 10.634; Georgii Descriptio, 82, l. 1742. However, some of the Mss. of the notitia 8, Notitiae, 8.48, held again that Amorium was metropolitan see of the eparchy of Galatia, but, as J. Darrouzès had explained, it was due only to the tendency of imitation of the old eparchial organization the content of the notitia 4 is far closer to the content of the notitia 2, from the beginning of the 9th century, then to the content of the notitia 7, from the beginning of the 10th century. On the other side, the fact that the hierarch of Amorium appears in the notitiae first as a metropolitan of one eparchy, and then as a metropolitan of another eparchy, could be taken as a direct testimony supporting the thesis about the discontinuity of the metropolitan rank of the see of Amorium.

There can be no doubt that the reason for the discontinuity was the catastrophe that befell Amorium on August 12th, 838, when, after the thirteen-days siege, the forces of caliph Al-Mutasim (833–842), sacked the city. What followed was the complete destruction and devastation of the city, slaughter and enslavement of its citizens. Quite naturally, a city with no people could have no bishop or metropolitan. Amorium remained deserted for the ensuing seven years. Only on September 16th, 845, after a treaty had been signed, the Arabs released the captured inhabitants of Amorium and they were allowed to return to their city and people it again.

In any case, after the destruction of the city in 838, the metropolitan see of Amorium existed no more. First information on the church of Amorium after 838 come from the end of 859 or the beginning of 860, when emperor Michael III (842–867) and patriarch Photius (858–867, 877–886) sent a delegation to Rome, to pope Nicholas I (858–867), with letters and gifts. The delegation consisted of protospatharius Arsaber, as emperor’s representative, and four church dignitaries, as representatives of the patriarch – Methodius, metropolitan of Gangra, Samuel, archbishop of Chonae, Zachariah, bishop of Taormina and Theophilus, bishop of Amorium. At the council held in Constantinople in 869/870, the last two claimed that they had and of ignoring of the new names and eparchies, as in all other cases in the same notitia, Notitiae, 8, p. 290, comm. The Ms. used by H. Gelzer for his edition of the Nova Tactica, that was later split by Darrouzès into the notitia 8 and notitia 9, has no notes about the eparchies within the list of the metropolitan sees, Georgii Descriptio, 58, l. 1157; while in the list of the suffragans of metropolitans there is clear reference that Amorium was a metropolitan see of the eparchy of Phrygia, Georgii Descriptio,82, l. 1742. On the fall of Amorium in 838 and the fate of its inhabitants, cf. Josephi Genesii Regum libri quattuor, edd. A. Lesmueller-Werner – I. Thurn, Berolini – Novi Eboraci 1978, (III, 14) 49.66–73; Symeonis magistri et logothetae Chronicon, ed. S. Wahlgren, Berolini – Novi Eboraci 2006. 130.32–33; Theophanes Continuatus, Ioannes Cameniata, Symeon Magister, Georgius Monachus, ed. I. Bekker, Bonnæ 1838, (III, 33–36) 129.8–134.21; Pseudo-Symeon, Theophanes Continuatus et all., 638.12–640.2; Georgius Monachus Continuatus, Theophanes Continuatus et all., 804.19–805.22; Skazanija o 42 amorijskih mučenikah*, 1–90; Vasilev, Arabes I–1, 161–173; W. Treadgold, The Byzantine Revival 780–842, Stanford 1988, 297–305; A. Kazhdan, Hagiographical notes, Byz 56 (1986) 159.

28 Vasilev, Arabes I–1, 201–203; Kazhdan, Hagiographical Notes, 159.

29 Nicetas David, The Life of Patriarch Ignatius, edd. A. Smithies, J. M. Duffy, Washington 2013 (CFHB 51), 42, 15–31; Liber pontificalis II, ed. L. Duchesne, Paris 1955, 154.21–155.10, 158.15–27; Mansi, XVI, 4 B–C; Photii patriarcae Constantinopolitani epistulae et amphilochia, I–IV, edd. B. Laourdas – L. G. Westerink, Lipiae 1983–1986, no. 288; Nicolai I papae epistulae, ed. E. Perels, MGH, Epp. VI, Epp. Karolini avii IV, Berolini 1925, 458.36–459.4, 505.31–34, 513.13–19; F. Dvornik, Le schisme de Photius. Histoire et légende, Paris 1950, 116–124. The last two were bishops, overthrown by patriarch Ignatius (847–858, 867–877) because of their cooperation with Gregory Asbestas, the metropolitan of Syracuse, the act allegedly recognized by pope Benedict III (855–858), so that new pope Nicholas I would not have them recieved as bishops and cocelebrants, Mansi, XVI, 58 C–D. However, as supporters of his friend Gregory Asbestas, they were rewarded by patriarch Photius and even more promoted, so Zachariah was moved from the position of the bishop of a small Sicilian town of Taormina to the important position of metropolitan of Chalcedon, Dvornik, Schisme, 108; P. Komatina, Crkvena politika Vizantije od kraja ikonoborstva do smrti cara Vasilij I, Beograd 2014, 133.
been ordained bishops already during the pontificate of patriarch Methodius (843–847).31 In the case of Zachariah of Taormina, it was quite true. Namely, patriarch Methodius sent the then priest Zachariah as his envoy to Rome, but, while he, on his way to Rome, stayed in Sicily, the then metropolitan of Syracuse, Gregory Asbestas, ordained him bishop of Taormina. The action was contrary to the canons, and Gregory was called to Constantinople to defend himself before the patriarch.32 Thus, there is no reason to doubt that Theophilus was ordained bishop of Amorium also during the pontificate of patriarch Methodius. Because Amorium was destroyed and devastated in 838 and its inhabitants released from the Arab captivity only in September 845, it seems that Theophilus was most probably the first bishop of the restored and repopulated Amorium, ordained at the end of 845.

What is of interest for the issue we discuss here is the question of the rank the said Theophilus held in 859/860. The author of the Life of pope Nicholas I in the Liber Pontificalis makes a clear distinction between the ranks of the ecclesiastical members of the Constantinopolitan delegation. According to him, Methodius was a metropolitan, Samuel was a bishop, and Zachariah and Theophilus were deprived of the honor of episcopate (...depositi ab honore episcopatus...).33 According to the Vita Ignatii, too, Theophilus of Amorium was an ordinary bishop.34 But, what is important to underline is that the author of that work, Nicetas David Paphlagon, makes clear distinction between the rank of Theophilus and the rank of Samuel of Chonae. According to him, Samuel of Chonae had been up to the very same time just an ordinary bishop, suffragan of the metropolitan of Laodicea, but by the decision of patriarch Photius he was freed from the subordination to the said metropolitan and raised to the rank of autocephalous archbishop, subordinated directly to the patriarch of Constantinople.35 Theophilus of Amorium was, however, for Nicetas David obviously an ordinary bishop, at the bottom of the hierarchy of the Patriarchate.36 That confirms the thesis that a serious degradation in the rank of the hierarch of Amorium occurred in the meantime, which could have only been a consequence of the events of 838.

The Life of Blasius of Amorium, a Saint who originated from Amorium and died in 912, also gives some information on the church conditions in Amorium and its surroundings in the mid-9th century. According to it, the Saint, whose baptismal name was Basil, originated from the city of Amorium, the village of Aplatianae, which was, however, subordinated to the enery of pious and glorious metropolitan see of 31 Mansi, XVI, 328 E sq.

32 Pseudo-Symeon, 671.1–5.
33 Liber pontificalis II, 154.22–23.
34 Life of Ignatius, 42.21.
35 Life of Ignatius, 42.22–23. That rank was not known in the hierarchy of the Roman Church, cf. Komatina, Osnivanje, 39–40; Isti, Moravski episkop Agaton na Fotijevom saboru 879/880. g., Srpska teologija danas 2009, prir. B. Šijaković, Beograd 2010, 362, so that was probable reason why the author of the pope’s biography in the Liber pontificalis doesn’t use it while referring to Samuel, calling him bishop instead.
36 At the Council of 869/870, Metrophanes, the pro-Ignatian metropolitan of Smyrna, stated that Photius had sent four metropolitans to the most holy pope to Old Rome, Mansi, XVI, 416 E. That information contradicts those give by the Liber pontificalis and Nicats David, although provide by a contemporary, it is for many reason incorrect, as shown by Laurent, Notitia, 465, n. 6. Nevertheless, he was also wrong when supposing that both, Theophilus of Amorium and Samuel of Chonae were autocephalous archbishops.
Pissinous. Later, when he reached the zenith of the first age, his parents decided that he should be consecrated a subdeacon. The consecration was performed by the great hierarch of the said holy metropolitan see, metropolitan Eustratius. We read further that the same Eustratius was a disciple of the great Ignatius, who was at that very time the lighthouse of justice to Constantinople and who was leading its people divinely and piously towards the teachings of righteousness, which means that Blasius was consecrated a subdeacon between 847 and 858, when Ignatius held the patriarchal throne of Constantinople for the first time. I would not examine here the question why, according to the author of the Life, the village of the Saint’s origine was in the enory of the metropolitan of Pissinous, even though it belonged to the city of Amorium, and why the consecration of the young Basil/Blasius to the rank of subdeacon was performed by the metropolitan of Pissinous and not by the bishop of Amorium. I would only underline that all of that clearly testifies that between 847 and 858 Amorium with its surroundings belonged to the metropolitan see of Pissinous, which confirms the thesis that at that time Amorium was just an ordinary bishopric subordinated to the metropolitan of Pissinous, and not the metropolitan see of its own, as it had been before 838, nor the autocephalous archbishopric, as it had been even earlier.

Amorium became a metropolitan see once again certainly before the end of 879. At the Council of Constantinople, known as the Photian Council, which began at that time, a certain Bessarion of Amorium was present, and his name was recorded near to the top of the list of the participants, among the names of the metropolitans. I would not examine here the possible reasons that could have led to the restoration of the metropolitan see of Amorium, but only wish to assert that the restored metropolitan see got the jurisdiction over the same bishoprics it had before 838, as is evident from the notitiae episcopatum of the 10th century.

---

38 Vita Blasii Amoriensis, 660.
39 Vita Blasii Amoriensis, 660.
40 In the Roman and Byzantine Empire, the area of the jurisdiction of a bishop was conterminous with the administrative area of the city (poli, civitas) the church of which he led, J. F. Niermeyer, Mediae Latinitatis Lexicon Minus, Leiden 1976, 183. A number of cities formed a province, that is, an eparchy, so that the bishop of the capital city (metropolis) of that province was a metropolitan of the bishops of all of its cities.
41 Laurent, Notitia, 466–467.
42 Mansi, XVII, 373 C.
43 The first possible reason for the restoration of the metropolitan see of Amorium is that it could have been a reward patriarch Photius gave the bishop Theophilus, his loyal supporter, who after Photius’ enthronement on December 25th, 858, regained all the pastoral rights in his bishopric which he had been deprived of by the decision of the former patriarch Ignatius. But, in the acts of the Council of Constantinople of 869/870, held during the second pontificate of Ignatius (867–877), at which Theophilus was again persecuted for being the follower of Photius, there are no implications that Theophilus was granted the metropolitan rank by Photius, Mansi, XVI, 328 E sq. Another, and in my opinion more probable reason was the high estimation and reverence the Forty-two martyrs of Amorium had in the Empire at that time, which was especially emphasized by the construction and consecration of the church in honor of them in Constantinople by emperor Basil I (867–886), Skazanija o 42 amorijskih mučenikah*, 278–279; Honigmann, Notitia, 210; Kazhdan, Hagiographical notes, 152. It could have been the very opportunity that made the emperor decide to restore the metropolitan rank to the church of the city of Amorium.
44 Notitiae, 7.654–659, 9.528–533, 10.634–639; Georgii descriptio, 82, l. 1742. For the case of the notitiae 8, cf. n. 27.
Maximianae. In the notitia 4 there was also recorded the bishopric of the city of Maximianae, as a suffragan of the metropolitan of Nicaea.⁴⁵ In one of the mss., the Vaticanus graecus 1167, there is a note that the bishopric of Maximianae was established by metropolitan Nicephorus of Nicaea, who held that position in the mid-⁹th century. It is not known when he assumed the office, but it is known that he remained in it until 877/878.⁴⁶ This led V. Laurent and V. Grumel to the conclusion that the notitia 4 was composed after the establishment of the said bishopric, that is, most probably between 845/846 and 863–869, according to Laurent, or between 848 and 858, according to Grumel.⁴⁷ However, J. Darrouzès warned that the bishopric of Maximianae was not recorded in the archetype of the notitia 4, so that its inclusion in later mss. of the notitia could not be taken as a base for the dating its composition.⁴⁸

Notes on the West and Isauria. Crete. Notitia 4 contains a separate passage for the church provinces that traditionally had been part of the jurisdiction of the Church of Rome, but after 732, due to the emperors' will, were subordinated to the Patriarchate of Constantinople. That passage is accompanied by the note on the church province of Isauria and its metropolis Seleucia, which originally had formed part of the Patriarchate of Antioch, but it too became part of the Patriarchate of Constantinople by the time of the composition of the notitia 4. The passage is found at the very end of the notitia, after the list of the metropolitan suffragans according to their metropolitan sees, which ends with the list of the suffragans of the metropolitan see of Amorium, the newest of all the metropolitan sees.⁴⁹ Data provided by that passage are useful primarily for the reconstruction of the process of incorporation of the eparchies once under the Church of Rome and the Patriarchate of Antioch within the area of the jurisdiction of the Patriarchate of Constantinople during the ⁸th and ⁹th century. Nevertheless, there is one piece of information in that passage which is of utmost importance for the dating of the composition of the notitia 4.

That passage of the notitia 4 contains the following list of the metropolitan sees of the Western provinces: Thessalonica, Syracuse, Crete, Corinth, Rhegium, Nicopolis, Athens and Patras.⁵⁰ We should pay attention on the mention of Crete.⁵¹ As it is well known, Crete fell under the dominion of the Arabs in 827/828.⁵² The population of the island was enslaved, and the Christians were allowed to keep

---

⁴⁵ Notitiae, 4.159; Georgii descriptio, 12, l. 207.
⁴⁶ Laurent, Notitiae, 467–469; Grumel, Notitiae, 198–207.
⁴⁷ Laurent, Notitiae, 467–472; Grumel, Notitiae, 207.
⁴⁸ Notitiae, 44–45. The same should be said about the bishopric of Taion, Notitiae, 4.198, which was also used by Laurent, Notitiae, 469, as an argument for dating the notitia.
⁴⁹ Georgii descriptio, 27, ll. 520–529; Notitiae, 4.483–493. The editor of the last edition, J. Darrouzès, thought the end of the list of metropolitan sees a more appropriate place for the passage but the end of the list of the suffragans of the metropolitans, Notitiae, 249, n. 39, 260, n. 483.
⁵₀ Georgii descriptio, 27, ll. 521–527; Notitiae, 4.484–491.
⁵¹ About Crete, cf. Notitiae, 2.10, 207–227 (with suffragans); 4.486; 5.37.
⁵² Genesius, (II, 10–11) 32.81–34.35; Theophanes Continuatus, (II, 20–23) 73.5–78.3; Symeonis Chronicon, 129.5; Pseudo-Symeon, 622.8–624.8; Georgius Monachus Continuatus, 789.1–7; Vasiliev, Arabes I, 49–61; Treadgold, Revival, 251–254.

The Arabs conquered and destroyed twenty-nine cities in Crete, Vasiliev, Arabes I, 56. Notitiae, 2.207–227, list the names of twenty bishoprics in the island at the beginning of the ⁹th century, amongst them Gortyna was a metropolitan see. On the church organization of Crete before the fall to the Muslim rule, their cult in one city only.53 Those who escaped death and capture, amongst them some monks and bishops, fled to the mainland, mainly to Thessalonica and Constantinople.54 Muslim rule in Crete lasted almost a century and a half, until 961.55 After the liberation of the island it was necessary to reevangelize it, because the Christian faith had almost vanished in it until then, either because of the forcible conversion of the population to Islam, or because of its alienation from the recognized Christian dogmas and rites.56 After notitia 4, Crete was mentioned in no notitia episcopatum until the notitia 10,57 which was composed in the second half of the 10th century, that is, after the liberation of Crete from the Arab rule in 961. Thus, we may conclude that during the Arab rule in the island of Crete between 828 and 961, while the remains of the Christian faith were being uprooted, there was no church organization in the island, because of which the island was not mentioned in the notitiae episcopatum from that period. That’s why we may assume that the notitia 4 had been composed before the Arabs took Crete in 827/828.

53 Genesius, (II, 10) 33.17–20; Theophanes Continuatus, (II, 23) 77.13–16; Symeonis Chronicon, 129.5; Pseudo-Symeon, 623.4–7; Georgius Monachus Continuatus, 789.1–8; Vasilev, Arabes I, 56–57.

The same Byzantine authors tell that the last metropolitan of Gortyna, head of the church of the island, Cyril, died at that occasion as a martyr by the Sarazin sword, Genesius, (II, 11) 33.28–34.35; Theophanes Continuatus, (II, 23) 77.16–78.3; Pseudo-Symeon, 624.5–8; Vasilev, Arabes I, 57, n. 2. However, I. Papadopoulos, Ἀνανεούσαι δεύτεροι Ἀγίοι Κυρίλλου Γορτύνης, ΕΕΒΣ 16 (1940) 247–251, tried to reject that information and to prove that the said authors at that place transmitted the report of the martyr death of an earlier Cyril of Gortyna, during the Decius’ persecutions of Christians, in the mid-3rd century. That opinion prevails in literature, N. Tōmadakēs, Πόλισθι Εκκλησία τῆς Κρήτης κατά τούς αιώνας, ΕΕΒΣ 24 (1954) 72–73; Tsougarakis, Byzantine Crete, 209, n. 58.

54 The fate of the Cretans is reported by the Life of Nicholas the Studite, who was a Cretan by origin himself, Vita S. Nicolai Studitae, PG 105, 865 B–C, 876 B – 877 A. Life of Ignatius, 64.4–7, mentions a certain Basil, who had earlier been a bishop in Crete, but who then, due to the invasion of the Agarenes, had to flee to Thessalonica, where he became a metropolitan, and in 862/863, as a supporter of patriarch Ignatius, he openly confronted the emperor Michael III, cf. Tōmadakēs, Πόλισθι Εκκλησία τῆς Κρήτης, 73–75; Prosopographie der mittelbyzantinischen Zeit. I. Abt. (641–867), ed. R.–J. Lilie et al., Berlin – New York 1999–2002, no. 941. At the Council in Constantinople in 869/870 there was present another Basil, archbishop of Crete, Mansi, XVII, 496 D, but his status is not certain at all, as well as the use of the title archbishop of Crete, instead of that of metropolitan of Gortyna, Tōmadakēs, Πόλισθι Εκκλησία τῆς Κρήτης, 76. In any case, his mention at that one place in the sources is not enough to support the claim that the church organization of the island persisted after the Arabs conquered Crete, as supposed by Tsougarakis, Byzantine Crete, 209–213.

56 In the process of reevangelization of Crete a prominent role was played by a famous Saint of the 10th century, St. Nicon “Metanoete”, who came to the island immediately after its liberation in 961 and stayed in it for seven years, restoring the Christian faith and the church organization, cf. The Life of Saint Nikon, ed. D. Sullivan, Brookline/Mass. 1987, § 20–21.

Tsougarakis, Byzantine Crete, 209–213, thought that the Arabs permitted the population of Crete to practice the Christian faith undisturbedly, while the metropolitans and bishops continued to be ordained regularly, but used to live outside the island, which is, in my opinion, wrong. The unexistence of the church organization in Crete during the period 828–961 is attested by the so-called Synodicon of Sybrita, which enumerates only the names of the Cretan metropolitans who held that position after 961, V. Laurent, Le synodicon de Sybrita et les métropoles de Crète aux Xe–XIIIe siècles, EO 32 (1933) 385–412.

57 Notitiae, 10.466–476. Crete is mentioned only in the notitiae 3, Notitiae, 3.14, 239–250, but it is in its entirety a special problem, on which, cf. Komatina, Crkvena politika, 244–246, 303–312, 314–315.
All of the so far examined gives a firmer ground for more precise dating of the composition of the notitia 4. Because it lists Amorium as the newest of the metropolitan sees of the Patriarchate of Constantinople, it has to be posterior to the notitia 2, according to which Amorium had still been autocephalous archbishopric. The notitia 2 was composed between 805/806 and 814. Because Amorium was mentioned as the metropolitan see at the end of 814, it could have got that rank before that moment and after the composition of the notitia 2, and that event makes the terminus post quem for the composition of the notitia 4. The sack of Amorium by the Arabs and the loss of the metropolitan rank for its church in 838 make a clear terminus ante quem. However, because it lists the church of the island of Crete among the metropolitan sees of the Western provinces, it is quite certain that the notitia 4 was composed before the Arabs conquered the island and destroyed the church organization in it, in 827/828. Thus, the notitia 4 should have been composed between 805/806–814 and 827/828.

Composition of the *notitia 6

Notitia 6 contains only the list of metropolitan sees and a separate passage on Western provinces, just as the notitia 4, without lists of autocephalous archbishops and suffragan bishops of the metropolitan sees.

In its content, the list of metropolitan sees of the notitia 6 in everything except that there are two more metropolitan sees, which are not present in the list of the notitia 4. Those are Trebizonde and Seleucia. The two metropolitan sees are listed at the very end of the list, after the metropolitan see of Hierapolis in Phrygia Capatiana, the last one in the "original" order of metropolitan sees of the Patriarchate, and near to, that is one of them immediately before, another immediately after, the metropolitan see of Amorium, which was mentioned for the first time in the notitia 4. Thus, it is clear that all of the three were new metropolitan sees, recently included in the part of the hierarchy of the Patriarchate which encompassed metropolitan sees, with the fact that Amorium got that rank prior to the other two. There is one more thing that the three metropolitan sees had in common in the text of the notitia 6 – none of them was assigned a name of the eparchy of which each of them was a metropolitan see. All of the three metropolitan sees were new ones in the hierarchical order of the Patriarchate, but because Amorium appears with that rank already in the notitia 4, while Trebizond and Seleucia are mentioned in the list of the metropolitan sees for the first time in the

---

58 Notitiae, 6.1–36.
59 Notitiae, 4.6–39.
60 Notitiae, 6.34.
61 Notitiae, 6.36.
62 Notitiae, 6.33.
63 Notitiae, 1.38, 450–455.
64 Notitiae, 6.35.
65 Notitiae, 4.39.
66 The fact that Trebizond was listed before Amorium is of no importance, because it is thought that those sees that got the metropolitan rank after Hierapolis in Phrygia Capatiana were not by default listed according to the chronological order of their promotion, cf. Notitiae, 7.673–690, p. 287, comm.
67 It was unlike Amorium in the notitia 4, where it was mentioned as a metropolitan see of the eparchy of Galatia, Notitiae, 4.39.
notitia 6, it is clear that the notitia 6 is posterior to the notitia 4, composed between 805/806–814 and 827/828. At the same time, the fact that it lists the metropolitan see of Amorium testifies that it was composed certainly before the fall of Amorium on August 12th 838.

The passage about the Western provinces in the notitia 6 contains another important distinction comparing to the same passage of the notitia 4. There is no Crete in it. That fact clearly testifies that the notitia was composed after the Arabs took the island in 827/828. Thus, the notitia 6 was composed certainly between 827/828 and 838. However, the composition of it could be dated more precisely. It depends on the reconstruction of the circumstances under which Trebizond and Seleucia became metropolitan sees of the Patriarchate of Constantinople.

Trebizond. In the notitia 1 Trebizond is just an ordinary bishopric, suffragan see of the metropolitan of Neocaesaria in the eparchy of Pontus Polemoniacus. However, already in the notitiae 2 and 4 it appears as both, the suffragan see of the metropolitan of Neocaesaria and as an autocephalous archbishopric, the last rank holding also according to the notitia 5, which contains no list of the suffragans of the metropolitans, only to be mentioned in the notitia 6 as one of the newest metropolitan sees. All of that testifies about an evident, but gradual, rise of this episcopal see. That rise began certainly with the Seveth ecumenical council in Nicaea in 787, because the name of the bishop of Trebizond is found in the acts of the council near to the top of the lists of participants, among the metropolitans, thanks to the fact that a certain metropolitan Christophorus signed the acts once as the bishop of Phasis, that is, Trebizonde, and another time as the bishop of Trebizonde only.

J. Darrouzès thought that the rise of Trebizond was inseparably connected with the disappearance of the metropolitan see of Phasis in the eparchy of Lazica, and that Trebizond took its place since the mentioned council of 787. The fact that Phasis as the metropolitan see of the eparchy of Lazica continued to appear in the notitiae 2, 4 and 5, he tried to explain by posing a hypothesis that it was only the title of the metropolitan of Phasis that was preserved, while the see itself disappeared and its place in the hierarchy was taken over by Trebizond. Concerning the notitia 6, in which both, the metropolitan see of Phasis and that of Trebizond were mentioned, his explanation was that it represents exactly the conditions at the Council of 787.
So, J. Darrouzès had an opinion that Trebizond became a metropolitan see in 787, in the place of Phasis. However, there are several facts that speak against the identification of the two sees. The text of the notitia 6 lists two metropolitan sees – Phasis at the 27th place in the hierarchy of the metropolitan sees, and Trebizond at the 34th place. The notitiae 2, 4 and 5, all of which are posterior to the Council of 787 and prior to the notitia 6, list Phasis at the 27th place in the list of the metropolitan sees, and Trebizond at the 35th, 36th and 37th place in the list of the autocephalous archbishops respectively, and at its old place in lists of the suffragan bishops of the metropolitan of Neocaesaria. In all those lists Trebizond is only described as belonging to the eparchy of Pontus Polemoniacus, with no indication of any kind of its relation with the eparchy of Lazica. Those facts testify that the episcopal sees in question were at that time two different and unrelated sees. The rise of the see of Trebizond was completely independent from the fate of the see of Phasis and it was not its replacement at the head of the eparchy of Lazica.

The rise of Trebizond could have had any connection to the fate of the see of Phasis only at its very beginning, at the time of the Council of 787. Namely, in the acts of the Council there are signatures of a certain Christophorus who signed the acts firstly as the bishop of Phasis, then as the bishop of Phasis, that is, Trebizond, and then as the bishop of Trebizond. He was indeed, as it seems, representing both cities. However, his original title was that of the bishop (that is, metropolitan) of Phasis. How, then, he came in connection with Trebizond? As the majority of scholars assume, exactly at that time, in 786/787, there occurred a revolt of the Abkhazians against the imperial rule, during which they conquered the province of Lazica. The metropolitan of Phasis could have in those circumstances taken refuge in Trebizond, the imperial stronghold nearest to his province. If the episcopal see of Trebizond was at that time vacant, he could have easily taken the place of its head, while simultaneously keeping his original position as the metropolitan of Phasis, and in that way he could have represented both cities at the Council, although he could have simply become the administrator of the vacant see of Trebizond, as similar cases occurred many times in the church history. In any case, after his death different bishops were to be elected for the two sees. However, soon after Trebizond was detached from the jurisdiction of the metropolitan of Neocaesaria and promoted to the rank of the autochphalous archbishopric, which was attested in the notitiae 2, 4 and 5, but it still was not deleted from the list of the suffragans of the metropolitan of Neocaesaria.

---

80 Notitiae, 6.27, 34.
81 We will discuss the time of the composition of the notitia 5 later on.
82 Notitiae, 2.78, 4.75, 5.78.
84 Mansi, XII, 994 C, among the metropolitans.
85 Mansi, XIII, 137 D, 384 A.
87 Zuckerman, Pontic Policy, 227.
88 Notitiae, 2.78, 4.75, 5.78.
89 It was like the case of Amorium in the notitiae 2, Notitiae, 2.77, 301. Cf. above.
Thus, we should look closely at which could have contributed to such a promotion of the see of Trebizond, which resulted in it becoming a metropolitan see, attested in the notitia 6. There was an event in the history of the city of Trebizond in the first half of the 9th century which exceeded all the other, and which, as scholars believe, could have had decisive impact on the church status of the see of Trebizond.90 After the victorious campaign against the Arabs in the Upper Euphrates region in 837, emperor Theophilus, in order to strengthen the Eastern borders of the Empire towards the Caucasus region, created a new military-administrative unit – the theme of Chaldia, the center of which became Trebizond.91 With that, this tiny litoral provincial city became one of the major administrative centers of the Empire. In that new capacity, it could have become also a major center of the ecclesiastical organization, becoming a metropolitan see, also by the will of the emperor.92

Already V. Laurent noticed that it was understandable that the appearance of a military commander bearing the title of patricius strategus of Chaldia,93 could have resulted in the intention of the ecclesiastical hierarch of the city to reach the similar rank,94 so that there would have been an metropolitan of Chaldia beside the strategus of Chaldia. However, in the notitia 6, where the metropolitan of Trebizond was mentioned for the first time, the name of his eparchy was not noticed.95 J. Darrouzès considered it certain that it was Lazica, because Trebizond is mentioned as the metropolitan see of the eparchy of Lazica in the later notitiae (notitiae 7, 8–9, 10).96 However, as it has been already shown, the rise of the see of Trebizond was not related to the fate of the eparchy of Lazica and its metropolitan see of Phasis, and in all the notitiae that testified about the rise of Trebizond before the notitia 6 – the notitiae 2, 4 and 5 – it had been always mentioned as belonging to its original eparchy, that of Pontus Polemoniacus.97 As a newly established metropolitan see within the same eparchy, Trebizond too could have got the name of the metropolitan see of the eparchy of Pontus Polemoniacus, the same held by Neocaesaria, to which it had been once subordinated. However, if the promotion of the church of the city of Trebizond to the metropolitan rank was closely linked to the establishment of the theme of Chaldia with its center in the city, the new metropolitan see could have indeed taken the name of the metropolitan see of Chaldia. Documentary sources of the 9th and 10th century confirm that the metropolitan of Trebizond pretended to the title of the head of the church in Chaldia – there exist a seal of bishop John of Chaldia from the first half of 91 Treadgold, Revival, 295, 337–340. Chaldia held the rank of a doukaton before it was promoted to the rank of a theme.

92 The case that the thematic reorganization of a region affected its ecclesiastical reorganization is well attested by the example of the creation of the theme of Peloponnesus and the establishment of the metropolitan sees of Athens and of Patras, cf. Komatina, Osnivanje, 32–50.
93 Les listes de préséance byzantines des IXe et Xe siècles, éd. N. Oikonomidès, Paris 1972, 49.10.
94 Laurent, Sceaux, no. 659.
95 Notitiae, 6.34.
96 Darouzes, Remarques, 212–213; Notitiae, 7.33, 556; 8.35; 9.416; 10.498.
97 Notitiae, 1.234; 2.78, 296; 4.75, 251; 5.78.
the 9th century,98 and letters of patriarch Nicholas Mysticus (901–907, 912–925) to the metropolitan Basil of Chaldia.99

We may conclude that the church of Trebizonde got the rank of the autocephalous archbishopric of the eparchy of Pontus Polemoniacus soon after the Seventh ecumenical council of 787, and that it then, in 837, after the emperor Theophilus created the theme of Chaldia, centered in the city of Trebizonde, was promoted, again by the will of the emperor, to the status of the metropolitan see of the new eparchy of Chaldia. Its new rank was soon afterwards noticed in the notitia 6.100 Even though in the notitiae of the 10th century (notitiae 7, 8–9, 10) it is mentioned as the metropolitan see of the eparchy of Lazica,101 the fact that patriarch Nicholas Mysticus in official correspondence addressed the metropolitan of Trebizonde as metropolitan of Chaldia,102 testifies about a vivid memory of such a titulature in Trebizonde and Constantinople alike.

Seleucia. According to the notitia 4, Seleucia, the metropolitan see of the eparchy of Isauria, which once had been a part of Patriarchate of Antioch, was included into the hierarchy of the Patriarchate of Constantinople, and was listed along with the metropolitan sees of the Western provinces, once under the jurisdiction of Rome, in a separate passage of the notitia. However, in the notitia 6, unlike churches of those Western provinces, which are still listed separately,103 Seleucia of Isauria appears within the basic list of metropolitan sees under the jurisdiction of the patriarch of Constantinople, at the last place of it, just after the metropolitan sees of Trebizonde and Amorium, the two newest in that hierarchy.104 It thus seems that it lost its special status as a former part of the Patriarchate of Antioch and was fully integrated within the hierarchy of the Patriarchate of Constantinople during the time between the composition of the notitia 4 and 6, unlike the metropolitan sees of the Western provinces, which were fully integrated within the Constantinopolitan hierarchy only at the beginning of the 10th century.105

Why the metropolitan see of Seleucia of Isauria so easily became full part of the Patriarchate of Constantinople and why it happened during the third or fourth decade of the 9th century? The explanation, most probably, lies, as in the case of Trebizonde, in the changes of the military-administrative organization that took place in the border area of the Empire towards the Arabs in the region of the Taurus Mountains. Namely, during

98 Laurent, Sceaux, no. 659.
100 Old view about the establishment of the metropolitan see of Trebizonde during the pontificate of the patriarch Methodius (843–847), based of the Trebizondine sources of the 14th century, A. Papadopoulos-Kerameus, Συμβολές εἰς τὴν ἱστορίαν Τραπεζοῦντος, VV 12 (1905) 138–141, is inaccurate and legendary, cf. also Darrouzes, Remarques, 210.
101 Notitiae, 7.33, 556; 8.35; 9.416; 10.498.
102 Nicholas I, Letters, nos. 74.18–19, 114.1, 128.1; Zuckerman, Pontic Policy, 226–228.
103 Notitiae, 6.37–46.
104 Notitiae, 6.36.
105 Metropolitan sees of the Western provinces were fully integrated within the hierarchy of the Patriarchate of Constantinople only thanks to the efforts of patriarch Nicholas Mysticus at the beginning of the 10th century, and the testimony about that is preserved in his prelude to the text of notitia 7, Notitiae, p. 270.
the fourth decade of the 9th century, emperor Theophilus created a number of clissuras, the military-administrative units of lower rank, along the Byzantine-Arab border. There was a clissura of Seleucia among them, created in the territory which previously formed turma within the theme of Anatolics. By turning Seleucia into a separate clissura, it became fully independent military-administrative unit, although of a lower rank, with its separate and independent command and administration, subjected directly to the imperial capital.106 Firmer binding of that region to Constantinople in military-administrative sense might have had as its consequence also its firmer binding to the capital in the field of the church organization.

In the notitia 6 the metropolitan see of Seleucia is mentioned without a notice on the eparchy it belonged, just as Trebizond and Amorium.107 However, in the notitia 4 it is mentioned as the metropolitan see of the eparchy of Isauria.108 It was only later, in the notitiae of the 10th century (notitiae 7, 8–9, 10) that it was listed as the metropolitan see of the eparchy of Pamphylia.109 Thus, there is no reason to doubt that in the notitia 6 it still represented the eparchy of Isauria.

If we accept that the promotion of the church of Trebizond to the rank of a metropolitan see was linked to the establishment of the theme of Chaldia in 837 and that the full integration of the metropolitan see of Seleucia of Isauria within the regular hierarchical order of the Patriarchate of Constantinople was due to the creation of the clissura of Seleucia at that same time, we come to the quite precise date of the composition of the notitia 6 – during 837 or the first half of 838.

The problem of the notitia 5

Notitia 5 contains only the list of the metropolitan sees, the passage on the sees of the Western provinces attached at the end of the list, and the list of the autocaphalous archbishoprics. The data it provides are quite conflicting and pose many obstacles to its precise placing within the context of the notitiae 2, 4 and 6. However, after a close look, we can establish some elements for its dating.

Those elements are the following:

a) The list of the metropolitan sees ends with the see of Hierapolis in the eparchy of Phrygia Capatiana,110 there is no Amorium, as in the notitia 4, neither Trebizond and Seleucia, as in the notitia 6.

---

106 Treadgold, Revival, 315. Clissurae were mentioned for the first time in the Arab sources for the period 838–848, J. Ferluga, Le Clisure bizantine in Asia Minore, ZRVI 16 (1975) 13. Although the clissura Seleucia was not mentioned in the Tacticon Uspenskij, the explication of that fact by the editor, N. Oikonomidès, that it was due to a scribal error, and that we should read κλεισουράρχης Σελευκίας instead of κλεισουράρχης Σοζοπόλεως, unattested in any other source, looks quite convincing, Oikonomides, Listes, 55.6. 54, n. 35.

107 Notitiae, 6.34–36.

108 Notitiae, 4.493. As a metropolitan see of the eparchy of Isauria Seleucia was mentioned also in the notitia 3, on which, cf. Komatina, Crkvena politika, 244–246, 303–312, 314–315.

110 Notitiae, 5.33.
Place of the ecclesiastical sees of Amorium, Crete, Trebizonde and Seleucia in the hierarchy of the Patriarchate of Constantinople in the 8th and the first decades of the 9th century according to the Notitiae episcopatum 1, 2, 4, 5 and 6:

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th></th>
<th></th>
<th></th>
<th></th>
<th></th>
<th></th>
<th></th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Amorium</td>
<td>bishopric</td>
<td>autocephalous archbishopric</td>
<td>autocephalous archbishopric</td>
<td>metropolitan see</td>
<td>metropolitan see</td>
<td>metropolitan see</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Crete</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td>metropolitan see</td>
<td></td>
<td>metropolitan see</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Trebizonde</td>
<td>bishopric</td>
<td>autocephalous</td>
<td>autocephalous</td>
<td></td>
<td>autocephalous</td>
<td>metropolitan see</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Seleucia</td>
<td></td>
<td>archbishopric</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td>metropolitan see</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

(Place of the ecclesiastical sees in a separate list)
b) There is a separate passage about the sees of the Western provinces,\(^{111}\) as in the notitiae 4 and 6.

c) In that passage, there is Crete,\(^{112}\) as in the notitia 4.

d) In that passage, there is no note on Seleucia of Isauria, unlike the notitia 4.

e) In its archetype, most probably, there was no mention of the metropolitan see of Larisa,\(^{113}\) which is not mentioned in the notitia 4, but is in the notitia 2.

f) In the list of the autocephalous archbishoprics, there is mention of Trebizond,\(^{114}\) just as in the notitia 2 and notitia 4.

What do these facts tell? The presence of Crete within the passage about the Western provinces testifies that notitia 5 was composed before 827/828. The absence of Amorium from the list of the metropolitan sees points that the notitia was composed before the end of 814 and that it is older than the notitia 4. The presence of Trebizond within the list of the autocephalous archbishoprics testifies that it belongs to the time of the composition of the notitiae 2 and 4. The absence of the note on Seleucia from the passage about the Western provinces, however, confirms that it is older than the notitia 4, but the very existence of that passage testifies that it is younger than the notitia 2, in which there is no such a passage, and that it is close to the notitia 4. That is further confirmed by the absence of Larissa from the passage about the Western provinces.

Considering all of that, we may assume that the notitia 5 was composed before the end of 814, but that it is younger than the notitia 2, composed between 805/806 and 814, and older then the notitia 4, composed between before the end of 814 and 827/828.

ЛИСТА РЕФЕРЕНЦИ – LIST OF REFERENCES

Извори – Primary Sources

Georgii Cyprii Descriptio orbis Romani, ed. H. Gelzer, Lipsiae 1890.

Ignatii archiepiscopi Constantinopolitani Vita sive Certamen, Auctore Niceta servo Jesu Christi, cognomino Davide Paphlagone, Patrologia Graeca 105, 487–574.

\(^{111}\) Notitiae, 5.34–43.

\(^{112}\) Notitiae, 5.37.

\(^{113}\) Notitiae, 5.43, n. 35–43.

\(^{114}\) Notitiae, 5.78.

Nicolai I papae epistolae, ed. E. Perels, Monumenta Germaniae Historica, Epistolae VI, Epistolae Karolini aevi IV, Berolini 1925; 257–690.

Skazanija o 42 amorijskih mučenikah“ i cerkovnaja služba im”, izd. V. Vasil’evskij – P. Nikitin”, Zapiski Imperatorskoj Akademii Nauk“ VIII, 7/2, St-Peterburg“ 1905.

Symeonis magistri et logothetae Chronicon, ed. S. Wahlgren, Berolini – Novi Eboraci 2006 (Corpus Fontium Historiae Byzantinae 44/1).

Synaxarium Ecclesiae Constantinopolitanae, ed. H. Delehaye, Bruxelles 1902.

Theophanes Continuatus, Ioannes Cameniata, Symeon Magister, Georgius Monachus, ed. I. Bekker, Bonnae 1838 (Corpus Scriptorum Historiae Byzantinae 45).

Vita S. Nicolai Studitae, Patrologia Graeca 105, 863–925.

Литература – Secondary Works

Ferluga Ј., Le Clisure bizantine in Asia Minore, Zbornik radova Vizantološkog instituta 16 (1975) 9–23.

Honigmann E., Die Notitia des Basileeos von Ialimbana, Byzantion 9 (1934) 205–222.

Laurent V., Le synodicon de Sybrita et les métropoles de Crète aux Xe–XIIIe siècles, Échos d’Orient 32 (1933) 385–412.

PREDRAG KOMATINA: Date of the composition of the Notitiae Episcopatum ...

Papadopoulos I., *Uparcei kal deuterop [Agioj Kyrilloj Gortunhj], Ἐπετρῆ Ἐταιρεῖα Buzantinoj Spoudwn 16 (1940) 247–251 [Papadopoulos I., Ἐπετρῆ Ἐταιρεῖας Βυζαντινῶν Σπουδῶν 16 (1940) 247–251].

Vasiliev A., Byzantium and the Arab World I–1, Bruxelles 1935.

Предраг Коматина
(Византиолошки институт САНУ, Београд)

ВРЕМЕ НАСТАНКА ЕПИСКОПСКИХ НОТИЦИЈА ЦАРИГРАДСКЕ ЦРКВЕ БР. 4, 5 И 6

Нотиција Василија из Јалимбане, данас позната као нотиција бр. 4, блиска је по садржају и млађа од нотиције 2, која је настала између 805/806. и 814. године, али је и прва у којој се међу митрополитским столицама јавља Аморион. Пошто је епископска столица тог града добила митрополитски ранг пре краја 814. године, а изгубила га услед арабљанског освајања и разарања града 838, то је ово најшири временски оквир за настанак нотиције 4. Међутим, пошто се у њој јавља и митрополија Крита, која није постојала у време арабљанске власти над острвом, између 827/828. и 961. године, може се закључити да је нотиција 4 настала у периоду између 805/806–814. и 827/828. године.

Нотиција бр. 6 по садржају списа митрополитских столица слична је нотицији 4, и као и она садржи Аморион, али за разлику од ње садржи и две нове митрополије – Трапезунт и Селевкију, и не садржи Крит. Присуство Амориона и одсуство Крите сведочи да је настала између 827/828. и 838. године, док помињање митрополија Трапезунта и Селевкије, чији се настанак може повезати са војноадминистративном реорганизацијом у подручју источне граничe Царства, тј. настанком теме Халдије са седиштем у Трапезунту и клисуре Селевкије, упућује да настанак ове нотиције треба тражити у врло одређеном временском оквиру, 837/838. године.

Коначно, нотиција 5, која припада истом временском контексту као и нотиције 2, 4 и 6, може се на основу неких елемената из свог садржаја сместити у временски оквир 805/806–814, после настанка нотиције 2, али пре настанка нотиције 4.